1. In May 1953, the Revolutionary Military Council instructed the East China Military Area Command to expand the Communications School at Nanking<sup>1</sup> and to increase the number of trainees at the school in July 1953. Similar instructions on the expansion of communications training were issued also to the other major military areas because of the increasing demand for military communications personnel.
2. The East China Military Area Command planned to increase the number of trainees in the 7th Class, which was to open in July, to 2,500 persons and to organize the trainees into five ta tui (1129/7130) instead of into three ta tui as formerly.
3. At the end of June 1953, when the 6th Class of 2,000 trainees was to complete its 18 months of training, the Communications School was to have trained a total of 7,000 persons, 40 per cent of whom received assignments to military troop units.
